COURT (from page 1, col. 3)

with the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court. NISBCO's act of filing an amicus brief in the Johnson v. Robison case represents part of our continuing service to individuals and to the CO community. Certainly the Robison decision has direct bearing upon the future of many individual COs and on the legal and public attitude toward conscientious objection itself.

William has been active as a volunteer worker in the Civil Rights Movement and is currently active in a poverty agency as a member of its Board.

Whatever the outcome of the Court's consideration, William holds deeper ideals within the larger CO concern. A comment which appeared in an interview in the Boston Sunday Globe, January 14, 1973, points to what for him is the real issue underlying all others.

He said in part: ". . . .the money was never my biggest concern. If the Appeals Court and the Supreme Court uphold U. S. District Court Judge Garrity's ruling, all well and good. But I'd much prefer it if the other seven justices came around to the position of Douglas and Brennan and declared the war unconstitutional."
